

Your school community already knows how to show up.

When a family in your school is going through a tough time, you don't need to invent new ways to help. Just extend what you're already doing.

Already packing lunchboxes?

Pack one extra for a student whose family is having a tough week.

Already doing the school run?

See if another child needs a lift.

Already washing school uniforms?

Wash another set for a family who could use one less thing to think about.

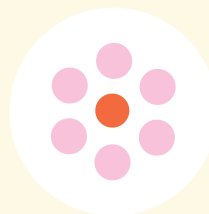

Already helping your child with homework?

Make room for one more.

Already sharing updates at a school event?

Send them to the family who couldn't be there, so they still feel included.

Already part of this school community?

Help make sure no family has to face a tough time alone.
